Nowadays, many countries around the world encourage their people to respect other cultures. When you are in Japan, for example, you can wear a kimono. You don't have to be Japanese to do that. We shouldn't discourage people from trying to experience cultures that are different from their own. As for the American teen who wore a cheongsam? I say, you rock, girl!

It's surely cultural appreciation! There are so many different cultures around the world, and that's something we need to accept. We should be able to wear whatever we want without being criticised. We should support people who want to embrace cultures from different countries.
